The Tower of Babel is a biblical story about the pride of humankind. In the story, God punishes the people for their arrogance by confusing their language, making them unable to understand one another. This leads to the construction of the tower being abandoned, and the people are scattered across the world. The painting by Hieronymus Bosch is a detailed and complex work of art, showing a massive, multi-tiered stone structure built on a hill. The tower is surrounded by scaffolding and construction equipment, indicating it is still under construction. In the foreground, a body of water is visible with several ships, including a large sailing ship and a smaller boat. On the left bank, a group of people, including a man in a white robe and a woman in a yellow dress, are gathered. The background shows a landscape with green hills and a blue sky with scattered clouds. The painting is a detailed work of art, showing a complex scene of construction and human endeavor.
